During August, VELA Cyprus continued to support refugee, asylum-seeking and migrant adults through a combination of language learning, practical guidance and community-based activities aimed at strengthening inclusion and independence.

English and Greek language classes remained ongoing, helping participants develop practical communication skills for everyday life in Cyprus.

The Akelius Language Learning Programme continued to complement classroom learning through interactive tablet-based activities that supported language practice and reinforcement.

VELA Cyprus also continued delivering workshops and group information sessions in reception and accommodation centres. Led by the multidisciplinary team, these sessions addressed practical topics related to employment, workers' rights, family and parenting, wellbeing, child development and everyday life in Cyprus.

Through this combination of language education, accessible information and interactive learning, participants were supported in building confidence, strengthening practical skills and engaging more actively in their communities.
